But there is a difficulty in the path of the tyro in English even greater than pronunniation, and that is what Mrs. Malaprop calls the nice derangement of epitaphs. English society is so artificial that nothing but the most careful study and close observation will keep the stranger clear of blunders. Even among the middle classes the system of honorary distinctions is so elaborate that the management of the titles Sir, Mr., and Beg, is almost an art in itself. The author gives an example of our "idiotismos" in this line. Whereas, in French you would write, " Monsieur, e vous annouce l'arrives de M. votre file.
